

Howler Monkey

The howler monkey lives in the rainforests of America. They live in family groups of about 10 to 20 monkeys. They all work together to make sure that everyone has enough food, shelter and water.

They start howling when the sun rises in the morning. The female is louder than the male.

The head and body is about 56 to 92cm long. So they are less than one metre.

They can smell food that is 2 kilometres away!

They spend a lot of time resting. They sleep in the trees.

They mostly eat leaves but they also eat fruit, flowers, buds, nuts and shells.

They use their tail to help them swing from branch to branch. They are very playful and they like to swing and play together.
